Full time

Mid-level

Fathom is a world-leading, independent consultancy with offices in London and New York. We specialise in macroeconomics, geopolitics and financial market research. We make it our business to challenge conventional thinking and to convey rigorous analysis in plain English, with feeling.

Our team of economists and data analysts produce global research and undertake bespoke consultancy projects to address topical issues. Our diverse client base includes governments, global asset managers, hedge funds and major corporates. Our world-leading research can be highly non-consensus; consistently challenging conventional thinking. We are proud to stand out.

We are currently looking to hire an outstanding individual with at least two years of experience working as a professional macro economist. The ideal candidate would be a good all-rounder, able to think globally while adapting their skills to the analysis of any country or region as required. Proven quantitative skills would also be an advantage. The successful candidate would be based at our London office (and will have the opportunity to work some of the time from home under a hybrid model of work).

If you would like to be considered, please submit your application together with a covering letter explaining your interest in this role.
